ISO 14001 certification: sites that are committed to the environment
In order to improve how we manage the impact of our activities on the environment, our sites embarked on an ISO 14001 certification process. This was obtained in February 2013. ISO 14001 is based on an internationally recognised standard for environmental management, and the aim is to continuously and sustainably reduce the environmental impact of our business.

HQE™ certification
HQE™ certification is a French approach relating to construction that aims to limit environmental impact in the short and long term, while enabling a building design that is fit for purpose for the user and environmentally friendly.

LEED® NC label
The LEED® NC label is the most established label at the international level. It picks up on the HQE objectives for buildings and extends them to the immediate environment of the project: reduction in light pollution, alternatives to vehicle use, water-efficient landscaping, waste management, recycling of materials, etc.
